Everyone can build your own memorial park, which can be a place to learn something, mourn, or simply to rest. Let your dreams fly, build it and enjoy it, just don't forget about wind, rain, snow, and temperature, because if you don't, it would really get lonely. And if you leave it unattended or build it in bad weather or even start building it in the wrong spot, the whole park would be ruined. About Hypoxia: I'm Daniel Gregory, and I live in Warsaw. I created this project because of my hobby of decorating graves of great heroes of history. I really like their stories and sounds that they make while the sun goes down. When I realized that I can't visit every grave in real, I decided to create my own memorial park, I make it filled with trees and different sculptures, I add other features that would help people think of the person buried under the ground and preserve their memory. “This is the 21st century! There is so much chemistry to be experienced and studied. Chemistry is a field that no one ever thinks of traveling to, but traveling to it is a simple matter of choosing to go or not.” Admirable Physicist Nicolas Rashevsky A science adventurer from Russia, who was the first person to experience and lecture on the subject of chemistry in 3D. He dared to take action and realized it would be an excellent opportunity to gather chemistry-related data. He is an excellent teacher for whom we are very thankful. From his lecture notes, Rashevsky developed this simulation where you can synthesize and conduct any reaction that he has described. Now, with the novel functions of the sandbox and quest modes, you can choose to experience chemistry in 3D for the first time. You can see how reactants interact with each other, form reaction products, and change into new elements. Chemical elements are arranged in a timeline, which are sequentially connected by gas and liquid. All elements are numbered by atomic number, which increases from left to right. You can use the hotkey of “3” and the hotkey of “V” to change over between the regular mode and the sandbox mode. And there is the chemistry quiz that you can study. Dedicated to all of Rashevsky’s brave colleagues who stuck with him and held out long enough to do the experiment. This simulation is based on the actual science research and conducted by David C. Noble, Ivan Shtarkman and Tali Erel. We would like to express our deep gratitude to them. SHOT GIVE! Thank you very much, Niconic. Appreciate you :) Edit: Don't worry about the dog, she's clean! Citing an alleged deficiency in their local tire retailer, the Orange County Employees Association is airing their own public campaign against the retailer, called "Stop the Badger." The group plans to make a banner and flash-mob in front of the retailer's downtown showroom, calling on both Anaheim, which owns the tire retailer, and the Orange County Board of Supervisors to step in and halt their operations. However, the OCEA's efforts are being aided by a handful of voters. "What seems to be happening is that we're trying to publicize this petition," said Mike Baum, president of the OCESA. "Well, we don't know who's doing it. There are people just standing in front of Walmart who are handing out those petitions." The petition Baum and the OCESA are trying to circulate in their efforts to oust the tire retailer is actually against the county's Board of Supervisors and the county's operations. The petition calls for both Orange County and Anaheim to take ownership of the tire retailer and, instead of charging the retailer rent, to use money from county operations to cover their cost of operation. "The county should not be subsidizing a business where workers are paid below minimum wage and are overworked," said Baum. Members of the OCESA have tried to solicit signatures on the petition for more than a week now. Baum said that, until last night, members were circulating the petition in the county's southeast and northeast, while others saw them in the southwest and northwest.
