The composition of plant roots and roots-associated bacteria are key determinants of rhizosphere functioning. The significance of these properties on soil microbes could be strongly affected by naturally occurring photorespiration. Here, we tested the influence of photorespiration on rhizosphere functioning of a leguminous and a non-leguminous plant as well as on the composition and activity of rhizosphere soil microbes. To check for the activity of photorespiratory enzymes, the capacity of 2,6-dichlorophenol-indophenol (DCPIP) reduction, the assessment of photorespiration by continuous burst frequency, the $(14)C-CO2$ fixation and the accompanying $CO2$ emission on $(14)C-CO2$ could be determined. Bacterial composition of rhizosphere soil was studied by phospholipid fatty acid (PLFA) analysis. Under laboratory conditions micro- and nano-surfactants (SLM) resulted in a strong reduction of rhizosphere-related microbial biomass. In contrast, 2.5% DCPIP caused an accumulation of rhizosphere microbes. The analysis of rhizosphere soil showed a higher abundance of non-rhizosphere-associated indicator bacteria. On the contrary, an increased presence of vervetibactin-

We present here a case of a child, born to consanguineous parents, who presented with severe growth retardation and clinical signs typical of neonatal hyperlipidemia. Diagnosis of familial hypercholesterolemia was established on a second sample of blood obtained at the age of 4 years from the proband. To date, our patient is 12 years old and has not shown any severe metabolic sequelae or increased cardiovascular morbidity. Our case illustrates the importance of familial hypercholesterolemia in a Turkish population, emphasizes the importance of a correct diagnosis, and demonstrates a mild phenotype of the disease in this patient.The HPC Accelerator - for GPU-powered computing The GPU accelerated HPC acceleration allows to use your GPU as a HPC accelerator. Today, the most popular GPUs are Nvidia's GTX or AMD's APU architectures - but this technology is quickly becoming a standard feature in HPC machines. Accelerating HPC jobs on a GPU can speed-up data transfer times by a multiple, sometimes by a 1000-fold.

This is especially important for big data. Using a HPC accelerator, there's no need to wait for the results of a job to download. Instead, they are streamed to the machine and the results are computed on-the-fly. Accelerated HPC with the HPC Accelerator Accelerated HPC accelerated with the HPC Accelerator Accelerated HPC with the HPC Accelerator Intel, NVIDIA and AMD collaborate to provide accelerated HPC with the HPC Accelerator If you would like to use the HPC Accelerator, we have created an integrated Intel version and a NVIDIA version of it. We will also soon provide a version for AMD's APU (Accelerated Processing Unit) architecture. You can read more about the capabilities, benefits and technical details of the H
