The present invention relates to plasma processing apparatuses and, more particularly, to apparatus for matching the spatial uniformity of a plasma across the width of the workpiece (e.g., wafer) being processed. It is well-known to use a plasma to process a workpiece, such as a silicon wafer. It is also known to use a plasma to etch a predetermined pattern onto a workpiece. Typically, an inductively coupled plasma reactor employs a capacitively coupled radio frequency (RF) generator which provides energy to a processing region near a workpiece. A typical inductively coupled plasma reactor includes a coil, or inductor, positioned above the processing region, and a shield positioned above the coil to electrically isolate the coil from the processing region. The coil is coupled to RF energy which excites the plasma within the processing region to a predetermined condition. Referring now to FIG. 1, an exemplary prior art plasma reactor 10 is shown. A lower electrode 12 supports a workpiece 14 within a processing chamber 16. An upper electrode 18 is located proximate to the lower electrode 12. The upper electrode 18 is coupled to an RF generator 20 which provides RF energy. The RF generator 20 produces a uniform RF field that is coupled to the lower electrode 12 through the workpiece 14. The upper electrode 18 defines the processing region within the chamber 16. The upper electrode 18 is coupled to an RF generator 22 which provides RF energy to the upper electrode 18. The lower electrode 12 is often at ground potential, and the upper electrode 18 is capacitively coupled to the lower electrode 12. Thus, RF energy is capacitively coupled to the lower electrode 12. The lower electrode 12 is typically a RF grounded pedestal. The upper electrode 18 is typically mounted on a quartz bell jar 26, which insulates the upper electrode from the lower electrode 12. FIG. 2 is a graph showing a prior art plasma processing recipe having a single etch step. Referring again to FIG. 1, the single etch step etches a predetermined pattern onto the workpiece 14. For example, the etch step may be used to form an ion-etched window within the workpiece. The etch step may include an isotropic etch, wherein ions etch at a predetermined depth within the workpiece 14. The
