New Orleans Pelicans All-Star center DeMarcus Cousins said Wednesday he expects to play in Thursday's All-Star Game in Toronto but he doesn't plan to declare if he will be active. "Yeah, I don't know. I've got to get through this game," Cousins told The Associated Press. "But I will say this: If you ask me how I feel, I feel pretty good, except for the fact that I'm playing basketball. I have to be able to say that I'm fully healthy and feeling like myself." Cousins, who was bothered by a toe injury for much of his rookie season last year, is listed as questionable for the game and hasn't played since January 23. Cousins sat out of the weekend's and yesterday's All-Star games. The All-Star team that will be announced at 9 p.m. EST Thursday on TNT will include first-time selections and five reserves -- the NBA announced Tuesday the five who are selected via fan balloting. Cousins would be able to participate in the game if he is healthy enough to dress. The All-Star coaches vote for starters and the captains of each conference select the reserves. "All-Star is basically about just expressing how good you think you are in your respective conference. You're going against the best, and that's how you can show it," Cousins said. "I've always been a fan of it. Whether I get to go or not is another story." "It's an opportunity to showcase your talent for the people of the world," Cousins said. "It's a lot of fun for myself and a lot of the guys." When Cousins was selected as a reserve last year, he returned to 6d1f23a050
